BOOTHS QUARREL AGAIN

CHIEF OF THE VOLUNTEERS RE-SENTS AN INSULT TO HIS WIFE.

Ballington Tells Why He Changes His Son's Name-New Phase of the Salvation Army Rivalry.

NEW YORK, March 24 .- "The Salvationists have even said that some day they expect to see the picture of my wife-Mrs. Maud Booth-in the rogues' gallery." So said Ballington Booth to-day in discussing the cause that had led him to take legal steps to have the name of his son and heir changed. The boy is now named William Booth, having been christened in the na of Ballington Booth's father, General William Booth, the founder and head of the Salvation Army. Ballington Booth and his wife, the parents of the boy, are so bitter at the attacks that have been made on them and their army-the Volunteers-that they have decided that their son shall no as the necessary steps are taken of Ballington and Maud Booth will be known as Charles Brandon Booth.

Mr. and Mrs. Booth decline at present to discuss at length the direct cause that has led them to take this remarkable and al- of the important work of organizing the most unprecedented step. That there is a new story of the warfare between the father and son is certain. The war between the Salvation Army and the Volunteers has broken out again, and so fierce is the conflict this time that the younger | assigned to duty in this country and at Booth has gone to the extreme step of giving formal and legal notice that he intends to take the name of his father away from

The notice that the Booths were to ask that the name of their son be changed was published in Montclair, N. J., yesterday. It set forth that on April 7 the parents would apply to the Essex County Court for the legal permission necessary in such a case. The published notice was signed "William Booth, by Ballington Booth and Maud B.

Booth, his parents and guardians." Young William Booth is now fourteen years old and is fully aware of the radical and remarkable step that is being taken in his behalf. He is a student in a military school in Montclair, and is not only large for his age, but is said to be one of the brightest youths in the institution. He looks with favor on the step that has been taken, and even had a good deal to say to the new name he is to bear.

"I am not ready at present to talk freely in this matter," said Balkington Booth today. "When I am ready I shall tell the world of the causes that have led my wife and I to take this step. We do not intend to hold back anything, and when the facts are made known I am sure that there will general public may think at present of the somewhat unusual step we have taken in regard to our son. Persecution does not begin to express the suffering we have had to undergo, and when the true story of the Salvationists and the Volunteers is made public I am sure that the world will sympathize with us. Nothing has been left undone to crush us. "But at present, as I have said, I must ask that the direct cause for the step we have taken in regard to the name of our son be left undiscussed. At some time in the future I intend to let the public know just why we have done this. I am certain we shall be upheld."

All this means that the recent report that General Both and his son and daughter had become reconciled is not true. This report was generally credited, and it was believed that in a short time the two great armies would again become one, under the leadership in America of Ballington Booth and his devoted and wonderful wife. But that the breach between the two sections is wider than ever is now evident. There is now said to be no hope whatever of a reconciliation, as General Booth, the elder, will probably never again have a tender feeling for the son, in view of the namechanging episode.

In connection with the widespread breach between the two armies Mr. Booth said: "I certainly desire to correct the report that the Salvation Army and the Volunteers of America are on friendly terms. So far as the Volunteers are concerned, they have sought to avoid opposition, friction and any bitterness, but all the Salvationists could do to thwart our purposes, to injure our cause and to injure our officers has "Not satisfied with the cruel treatment to Mrs. Booth, not satisfied with calling our people 'traitors,' 'devils' and 'street walkers,' their leader, Commander Booth-Tucker, has openly in their councils told their officers to pray for our downfall. "They have gone over our heads to the landlords of our halls, offering them more money if they would evict our people and rent them the halls. They have said that the Volunteers are failing and are heavily in debt, which is not the case. We have paid every creditor. "Apart from the legal reasons which we

During the last fortnight thousands who have escaped heretofore have been stricken, and the disease is plainly epidemic over a very wide section of country.

"The type of the disease is essentially catarrhal and chiefly manifests itself in inflammatory affections of the membranes of the nose, throat and upper air passages. The attack is quite sudden and there is generally a high temperature, with pain in the forehead, hacking and irritative cough, with general muscular pains and prostra-

WASHINGTON, March 24.-Secretary

The department commanded by Gen. Ludlow was practically confined to the city of Havana, and is within the limits of the province of Havana, commanded by Gen. Lee. The details of the execution of this general plan of merging one department into the other were specially confided by Secretary Root to the three officers most directly concerned, namely, Major General Wood, General Ludlow and General Lee. "HO FOR THE CAPE" NOW THE CRY OF MANY PEOPLE.

London Dressmakers, Therefore, Busy Making Gowns Suitable for the South African Climate.

(Copyright, 1900, by the Associated Press.)

LONDON, March 24 .- Three questions involving endless controversy and speculation have been rife during the week. They are the possibility of the dissolution of Parliament in the summer, imperial federation and the method of treatment of the so-called rebel prisoners in South Africa. So far as Parliament is concerned, it might as well dissolve at once, for all the interest that is being taken in its proceedings. Many apparently inspired articles appear forecasting dissolution at various dates, but as a matter of fact the existence of the present House depends entirely on the progress of British arms in South Africa. If they meet with quick success there will be, it is thought, an early dissolution. If the war drags on Lord Salisbury will retain power till the last moment allowed by the British Constitution. With less than a year in which to go to the country, it is only natural that the government will seize the most opportune moment, but no member of the Cabinet believes that such a monent has yet come within the limits of reasonable determination, in spite of the fact that the commander-in-chief of the forces, Lord Wolseley, is credited with prophesying that Lord Roberts will be in Pretoria May 15. If the forecast of the almost forgotten chief commander of the British army should prove correct, it would not be at all unlikely that Lord Salisbury may appeal to the electors in June. But several of the Cabinet ministers, including Lord Lansdowne, the secretary of state for war, have small hope that the war will be over before the fall of this year.

With such a diversion of opinion prevailing in the best informed circles regarding the duration of the conflict, it is evidently futile to propnesy regarding the tenure of ber of enlisted men. The surplus will by | viously dependent on the former. Lord Salisbury has not any intention of appealing to the voters until the British arms triumph in South Africa, and no one of any importance has yet been brave enough to event is likely to be accomplished. Hence, the guesses at the date of the dissolution of Parliament are scarcely worth repeating, though, by reason of their number and variety, some of them are almost bound to be correct. When the general election comes it can scarcely fail to return the present administration to power, unless between this time and that period some miracle effects the cohesion of the disintegrated Liberal party. So disintegrated does this party appear to be that Sir Edward Grey, the shining light of the Rosebery faction, found it necessary this week, when speaking at the City Liberal Club, London, to protest that internal dissension was no

> The question of colonial prisoners, from being the subject of cable messages exchanged between Lord Salisbury and President Kruger, has sprung into general discussion. In this connection it is understood that President Kruger set the ball rolling by demanding that colonial insurgents and British subjects commandeered by the Boers should, when captured, be treated as prisoners of war or else reprisals would be taken on the British prisoners at Pretoria. Lord Salisbury replied, saying he would deal with the rebels as seemed fit and would hold President Kruger personally responsible for the treatment of the Pretoria prisoners, whereupon President Kruger is reported to have rejoined that he would hold Lord Salisbury personally responsible for the rebels or something of that nature. But on all sides it is being discussed what should be done with the insurgents captured by the British. A commission of British judges to go out to the > Cape is talked of, though this is scarcely likely to happen. The predominating feeling seems to favor the policy of leniency now being carried out under Lord Roberts's direction, in spite of the fact that both through cable dispatches from South Africa and letters from English readers in the newspapers there the fact that the main objective is a peaceful, prosperous South Africa under British rule, and that vengeful justice will not tend towards the accomplishment of this. They endeavor to allay harsh criticism of the present methods, but, nevertheless, now that British territory has been practically regained and the Orange Free State is nominally annexed, the question of the treatment of the insurgents forms one of the most important questions upon which both British and South African opinion seem hopelessly divided.

The girl's parents, though poor, had scruples about sanctioning her engagement to Mr. Cavendish, on account of the rumors circulated about his many affairs of the heart, but they finally consented, and Mr. Cavendish went out to fight his country's battles in South Africa, after settling $50,000 on his flancee in case of his death, and arranging that if he is not killed within a year and is still in South Africa she is to go out to him and marry him there.
